

To allow cell phone use inflight on commercial airliners would be detrimental to a safe flight. The potential problems are numerous. Besides being in a small confined space with many people, telephone conversations would be heard throughout the cabin which could be an unpleasant experience--Just imagine what it is like in any airport terminal at 5pm during the boarding process of a bank of flights and that is what you would have on the airplane. Furthermore, we truly do not have a foolproof system of documenting potential terrorists and the possibility that one could get on the plane and give commands over the phone is frightening.
